Sugg’s London Argand burner of 1869

This model was first prescribed by the Metropolitan Gas Referees for London as the Standard Burner to be used for testing the gas supplied to the Metropolis, being used with a fixed gas consumption rate of 5 cubic feet per hour. This remained the standard test until 1900 when a test based on the luminosity of the burner was adopted.
Sugg Argand burners
[left] The London [right] The Governor

Sugg London Argand burner with support for shade
Sugg’s London Argand burners with shade and screen
[left] Viennese design  [right] Westminster design
Sugg ornamental gas fitting in use around 1878
Dining room ventilating light
Sugg’s Ventilating Sun Burner of 1883
Sugg Sun ventilating gas burner cluster
Plan from below

Sugg Sun ventilating gas light [right]
Sugg’s Oriental lantern
Sugg recuperative gas lamps

The casings were usually made of decorated Doulton pottery, which was richly embellished and beautifully decorated.
Advertisement from The Illustrated News of 1887
Lighting comparison: Sugg Aladdin lamp versus No.7 Union Jet
Three Sugg inverted gas lamps with Doulton pottery casings
Catalogue of 1886